

Information + Innovation Policy Research Centre

Calling Doctoral and Postdoctoral Fellows!

The Information + Innovation Policy Research Centre, is the newest research centre at the LKY School of Public Policy at the National University of Singapore. Our goal is to explore and understand the role of information in markets, organizations and society, especially as it pertains to our capacity to innovate. Issues of interest include but are not limited to information flow, governance, transparency, legitimacy, and online public deliberation. The i+i aims to be the premier research centre embarking on cutting-edge research, pushing the boundaries and frontiers of both theoretical development and research methodology.

Currently, we have several vacancies for one semester and/or one year doctoral/postdoc research fellowships in 2010/2011. We offer a brainy, fun work environment at Asia's leading policy school and one of the world's top 30 research universities, sufficient time for independent research, co-authoring/co-publishing possibilities, and a competitive salary - plus the many amenities of a highly advanced, multi-cultural city state with a great climate year-round await. So come join us!

If you are interested, please contact centre director Viktor Mayer-Schonberger (info@iplusicentre.net) or go to our website www.iplusicentre.net for more information.